My name is thewhiteeye. My real name is obviously something different.

When I was a kid I had anger issues, violent tendencies due to them and would lash out with violence because of them. Not in school. Not where people can see me. But at home. Im not a good person. Even though I always try to be kind and good, ive done horrible things. I hit my sister, she was 2 years younger then me, verbally and mentally abused, for the simple fact I found her to be stupid, disrespecting me and herself. Which yeah she did but she didnt deserve what I did to her. She didnt know better, and as a child, I should've understood, she was only looking up to me, only trying to follow her big brother. I failed her as a brother so early. But I got what I deserved, I didnt go to pre school, I was homeschooled due to me having the pretense of being late mentally, basically when I was born I wasnt supposed to be able to function like a actual human being and be very mentally disabled until later in life, basically being a 2 year old child at the age of 14. I was premature, born a month early or 2. Very weak, had a super weak immune system because of that, got sick frequently. But fortunately and unfortunately. I was smart, I was wise, aware and perceptive, I looked at human beings like how you would look at a group of dogs. I was curious, and filled with dreams. I didn't just see human beings, I saw patterns, emotions, words, functions, actions, reactions, cause and effect, past and present. I saw evil in the midst of good. Very early on, I hated this world, everything in it, actually on of my dreams at the time was to burn it down. I dont know why. I didnt even exprience it yet, but I hated how disgusting everyone was, I hated the hate and inconsiderate actions towards people, nature and everything else. But as much as I hated, I loved. I loved humans, I loved how they connected, I loved the world, nature, the trees, insects. I wanted to understand everything, I wanted to learn, and to know. My first dream, my dream, my goal, and mission. To understand humans completely, and to become truly free. I hated the world because I instantly felt trapped, like I was in a glass box, I could see the exit, but I couldn't get out. I was more like a robot, and alien. A logical machine, that sees abstractly and wholefully. Well at least I believe so.

At the start, I lived with my mom, my grandfather, my dogs, a lot of them, my little sister. At least at the time I was concious, I was 4 when I was finally sentient, I observed my surroundings, I was doing a math book with my mom, it was like I started seeing things in 3rd person, I remembered everything even when I was a baby. I contemplated life and death. Who is am. What i was.

I don't want to overly explain and detail everything as this would take mutiple days to explain my life, every single thought and experience that shaped me. Like what created WhiteEye, or what it means to be WhiteEye, is it just a name or symbol. So back to me going to school. I went into elementary, I wasnt one of those kids who cried because their parents left them, or their at school, I was actually excited since I never really talked to anyone my age, it was another way to learn about human beings. I remember my first exprience entering that classroom. Seeing the colors, the tables and chairs, then a girl came up to me and asked "did I see you before at the store?" And I was going to lie, I was going to lie and say yeah, because I was a person who experimented, its what I also saw humans as, but I didnt lie. I couldn't. I didn't like liars, especially lying no reason, I despised anything I viewed evil. But when I was in kindergarten, I was very talkative, I talked to anyone and everyone, about anything, I was a robot though, I was very monotone, didnt have emotions, didnt use body language, didn't really laugh, I had really deep eye contact as i would always listen. Slowly, I noticed that whenever I speak to people, they wouldnt listen, they would either lose interest and do something else. I didnt like disrespect but instead of spazzing out, I understood them, because I saw them as children, like a old person would, they're kids who are into what interest or excites them, so I started to have a high pitched voice, started mimicking others even though I didn't understand why anyone would use body language to ever convey meaning. I would observe them and understand them to the best i could. To me everyone was my friend, even if they were bad people. Then I found a bad person, that bad person influenced me to do things I didnt want to, I am responsible because of my curiosity, but he tricked, blamed and even hurt me a few times. I distanced myself but it more so a little wake up call. Understanding there is people who enjoy inflicting pain, someone who enjoys being the center, joking, and that was a little cognitive note on the person and people. Ive seen bad people, one of my biggest questions when I first started going outside was when I was in the car, we were driving past the gas station, it was a shell, i also lived in the hood but in the better neighborhoods, I was in oak cliff. I saw this women yelling at the man about their relationship, then the man yelled back. I watched them. I constantly asked why couldn't they just talk it out, why are they yelling when it won't get them anywhere but only more hatred and fighting. Why would you do that to someone you love, why are adults so much like children. I also saw all human beings like children. I just had a lot of respect, and manners because I was taught that from my dad side. So I would respect people older then me, and if they was really old, to me old was 65-90s, I would treat them with respect and understand the time of their lives. Younger people, like young adults and stuff, if you disrespected me, I didnt like you, I was a bit resentful since I believed in virtue I guess even though I didnt know what virtue was, I just know being considerate of others and understanding everyone. So in school you could see this affect, when someone disrespected I clapped back, I thought they were being stupid and was thinking their better then someone, I hated and despised being called a liar or anything bad because I didnt lie and I wouldnt do anything bad without reason. I also didnt have much of a moral compass even now I don't believe in ethics or society morals.

So, if I got in trouble, for something my mom believe I did or think I done something i wasnt supposed to, and I didnt believe or just didnt do what she thought I did, I would be filled with so much rage and always asking "did you call me a liar?" Or "are you saying im lying?" Because to me, lying was very very stupid, there was no point in lying, and if there was a need to lie, it must be a situation that actually requires full heartily the need to lie.

I was a very direct and respectful kid I would say, of course like I been saying, if you disrespect me then no. But I always treated people the same, saw people no different from others, I wanted to understand people. But I also didnt understand why no one would do the same. Why would you openly disrespect or hate for no reason. Anyway, I studied a lot as little child, well my mom would make me study and monitor me, she would test me on some things when it came to my work. I was on a third grade level in kindergarten, of course when you're on this level, or type of awareness you feel that its common or its like well why cant you. As you've been seeing, im very very aware and understanding. But what happens when you have my blood, and my expectations are so high, and I have too much respect? Well what happens is that my impulses, the inherited anger issues revolt on you. That you, was my little sister. I had the idea and expectation, that she was my little sister, why are you so stupid? Why are you copying me, are you mocking or trying to make fun of me? Because my sister was super big copy cat, and for me it was very disrespectful. She would say things that I would never say about people and I found it disrespectful. She would do things against what she was told to, that was disrespectful. She would do stupid stuff like break plates and all these things, and I found it distasteful. Heightened this with getting picked on, getting in trouble a lot for talking in class, always getting yelled at, being a center of blame for a lot of stuff. I unfairly put more pressure on my sister and did the horrible thing like hitting her or verbally insulting her because I couldn't think of anything different, I did everything off of impulse. Even with this me and my sister did everything mainly together. Bathed, go outside, play with the dogs, climb a tree, be in my mom room, sleep in the same bed, watch cartoons, talk to each other.

But a turning point was that I got in trouble in kindergarten for throwing a pencil in class, supposingly almost hitting a person in the eye. This happend because one day, I was listening to the teacher, watching her give the lesson, I was always listening, but this person head was in the way, and no matter how much I tried to move, I couldn't see, so I couldn't really write anything down. So I raised my hand and asked hey teacher I cant see the board. And this was about either the life cycle or photosynthesis, maybe, I know it was science and had a cycle. She told me "well maybe you need glasses". I was expecting her to tell me maybe to move seats, come closer so I can see, or ask me why. She didnt do any of those things, she asked me if I needed glasses, I took as disrespect, from a teacher. I was in rage, absolute rage, I took a pencil and threw it as hard as I can, then cried because I knew I did something bad and was extermely mad (I usually just cry because if I dont ill turn to violence to stop my anger) the pencil flew and dropped in the middle of the floor, gabbi the girl who was sitting, she had glasses, and the pencil was far away from her. But it was explained that I almost hit a girl with a pencil. it was a lie. A big lie.

So this is when I need to tell you about the darker side of me when I was a kid. One of my dreams was to murder people, exactly on the pretense of understanding the emotional weight that is felt from killing someone, what it takes to do so, they after effect of doing so, how it affects the people around them depending on their relationship and the information they know. I also wanted to be killed, to know what it felt to feel that pain, to die and what comes after. I wanted to torture, so I would understand how the mind changes or what it does to a person over time, and be tortured. I actually wanted to kill my whole family, imagined it mutiple times and even said that they will not die and better not before I kill them first. That's how much I hated and resented being in this world, I was like 4 or 5. I saw the humans like children, everything they did was intriguing and a lot of it was logically illogical. I didnt believe in commen sense. I didnt believe in anything higher. I hated people to even wish on their death, personally me doing it. I would imagine a lot of people just dying. Also this was a by product of a year of straight nightmares, of the same nightmare, I was afraid of the dark, ghost, I had a super weak stomach, weak immune system. So I had a nightmare where I was in a castle, it was very dark, the sky was red outside, you can only see it through metal bars, and count Dracula chased me down everytime, jump scaring me, hurting me, so much sound and noise, and I died everytime. Basically I died hundreds of times, which is how I developed exterme insomnia, I was also just a super hyper child, I was always thinking 24/7, I couldn't shut my brain off, I couldn't sleep at night, I couldn't watch TV, so a lot of the times I would spend staying up for days, like 3 days just being awake mainly because I had so much energy and was always thinking to the point I couldn't sleep, also I afraid of the dark. Even with a night light, it didnt help. I also could see spirits, ghost, and had traumatic supernatural expriences. Like once at midnight, everyone sleep, I went to the kitchen sneaking, trying to be quiet, got onto a small step ladder, to reach the cabinets for snacks, but i felt a presence, I looked to my left, saw my shadow doing a motion that I wasnt doing, I was reach for the cabinet, but my shadow did a pushing motion, and I fell onto the floor, scared I ran to my room, closed the door and hid under my covers.

There was a lot mentally that I now understand I was heavily affected by. But there was a big shadow underneath me. Sinister and evil. To my standards at least. That's why I always took myself away from that, the yelling, arguing, conflict and drama, because I would do or say something that i dont want to do. I got in trouble obviously, my mom whooped me out of my sleep, which was really me pretending because i didnt want to be whopped, and it lasted for so long. I was yelled at, and everything else. It was needed. I was basically shipped to my dad house, because whenever I needed to be dealt with she would send me to my dad. I loved both of them, I was scared of them too, mainly my dad because as I said I had anger issues, I inherited and I had control over mine because I learned it from how my dad would have explosive anger. So you can imagine how bad my dad anger issues actually is, noting that he is like me as we're both slight crazy, violent, like combat sports, intelligent, and was taught manners/respect. But my dad was a lot worse as he did a lot worse as a kid and as a kid he didnt have the self control aspect. He asked me once in the car, I said I didn't know why I threw the pencil because its on impulse and as a kid you dont have much understanding of your own actions onto why. So for me i genuinely couldn't explain why i did it, it was super fast and out of nowhere, I couldn't even understand how i got that angry. Its not until I grew older that I understood to the point I could explain. Anyway, I had a box top competition, I think it was a trix box, so I was going to ask my dad can I get a box top, I also just came down stairs too, so when I asked that, he sprinted full speed around the kitchen, to where I was, huffing, because we have this thing when we're mad we show our teeths and snarl like wolves, ik its a command rage reaction, but me and my sisters/brother on my dad side do it, and I hear that, I was scared because I didnt know what was going on, I thought maybe he was gonna give it to me, but actually he picks me up by the throat, slamming me into the wall, pinning me against it super tight so I couldn't breathe and he constantly asked me "why did you throw that pencil?" And I couldn't even try to answer because I couldn't breathe, like at all. He yelled for me to speak, so I with tears falling on my face choking, I had to point out that he was choking me, he released and I dropped to the floor. I couldn't answer him so he just made me go upstairs. I loved my dad, and was a bit scared by his anger issues, but then I was really terrified of him after that. I was actually scared at most adults because it was constant screaming all the time, and when I was in the first grade it got worse. But I won't say that yet.

There was more interesting expriences, I will speak about mostly my time in kindergarten so at the age of 5.